

Blue Mountain WATER SKINKS can detach their tail when they are in danger. Regrowing them takes a long time and requires a lot of energy.

WATER DRAGONS can hold their breath underwater for up to 90 minutes.

A GOANNA finds prey by flicking its tongue and picking up scent molecules from the air. If the prey is large, goannas can unhinge their lower jaw to swallow it.

L

LIZARD

Copyright Ingrid Hess 2022
Supported by bigci.org

Published by Blue Mountains Conservation Society in "Hut News"

Blue Mountains WATER SKINKS can detach their tail when they are in danger. Regrowing them takes a long time and requires a lot of energy.

WATER DRAGONS can hold their breath underwater for up to 90 minutes.

A GOANNA finds prey by flicking its tongue and picking up scent molecules from the air. If the prey is large, goannas can unhinge their lower jaw to swallow it.

L

LIZARD